“ I would like to say how dear Christine was to me. She was a soft spoken, thoughtful person with an expansive imagination. She found people she loved precious. She had a great need to take care of others. She was drawn to all kinds of people and was quick to figure out their view of life. We talked about her great desire to take sadness and turn it into sunshine. She wanted to light up a conversation with hope because she cherished the possibility that something wonderful could happen. Chris had a need to care for others and people like me who needed love were drawn to her. Really, all she wanted to do was tell people how much she loved God and that good things can happen. She had a wonderful mind. She was a poem I never got tired of reading. We wrote a song together that I have kept inside for forty years. A profoundly beautiful song that came from her heart. I wish the world could know what a lovely woman she was. Never hurtful. Always hopeful and loyal to take care of others. I have to admit that sometimes I didn't quite understand her. But that's not a bad thing. There were simply parts of her I would never have a chance to explore. My darling sweet sister and friend. One of the finest human beings I have ever met.
